DUMMER ACADEMY

Is situated in the town of Newbury, Byfield parish, four miles from Newburyport, and twenty-eight miles from Boston. The situation is healthy, retired, and unusually free from objects tending to endanger the morals of students, or divert their minds from study.

The studies comprise an English and a Classical course; either of which may be pursued exclusively, or both together, as the wants of the students may require.

The Classical course embraces the usual studies in the Latin and Greek languages, preparatory to entering college. In each of these languages the practice of composition is commenced at an early stage of the study, and continued by progressive exercises through the whole course. After completing the preparatory course, opportunity is given, to those who desire it, to continue their studies with a view to an advanced standing in college.

In the English department, the principal place is given to those studies which are of the most practical importance in the business of life. In those studies it is designed to do all that can be done in school towards making intelligent, prompt and correct business men.

In connection with either of the above courses, instruction will be given, if desired, in the French or German language, in the same thorough manner as in the Latin and Greek.

TERMS OF ADMISSION.

A good moral character will be required for admission into the Academy. For admission into the department preparatory to college, applicants are required to have been well instructed in reading and spelling, in Colburn's First Lessons, and the Elements of Geography, or studies equivalent. And for admission into the other department they shall be well instructed in Colburn's First Lessons, Parker's English Grammar (part 1st,) and Woodbridge's Rudiments of Geography, or studies equivalent.

VACATIONS.

There shall be three vacations in the year. The first, from the Wednesday immediately preceding the commencement at Cambridge College—four weeks. The second, from the Wednesday preceding the 25th of December—two weeks. The third, from the last Wednesday in April—three weeks.

TUITION AND BOARD.

The Tuition is $5 a term, $15 a year, payable in advance. Board may be had in the family of the Principal, or at the Mansion House, where the pupils will be under the inspection of the Assistant Teacher, or in other families in the neighborhood—price from $2,00 to $2,50 per week.
